100% Mission Driven

An Open Conference for Everyone

Open Camps' mission is to foster greater contribution to, collaboration among and adoption of open source technologies.

Open Camps is run on a not-for-profit basis by a team of over 250+ volunteers from across many open source communities. Our volunteer team and fundraising efforts help to keep Open Camps free to attend and 'open to all'.

We also appreciate the support of the multiple open source communities and the UN's Open Source Innovation Initiative (Unite Open Source), whose effort the past several years helped make Open Camps possible.

Conference Program

A Global Open Source Gathering

Open Camps aims to provide a mission-driven arena for open source leaders to help share their mission and engage with developers and community members.

In recent years, Open Camps has emerged to provide a global stage that's open to all, and committed to ensuring there are no barriers between the world's best open source developers, technologies and organizations.

Roadmap

@OpenCamps

The Best is Yet to Come

We started Open Camps in order to help create the sort of world we want for future generations.

Over the last 5 years we've achieved our initial goals making Open Camps one of the largest developer conferences in NYC, and then one of the world's largest open source conferences. Our rationale for these goals, was to establish Open Camps as a platform to help foster open source contribution, collaboration & growth.

For 2017, our focus is on formalizing and implementing best practices. However, once that's achieved, we believe that Open Camps has incredible potential to grow (likely to 10,000+ attendees) and have a massively positive impact on open source in the years and decades ahead. Thanks to each of our volunteers, all our partners (especially the UN), and the many source community members who've helped us reach this point.
